THE EAGER BEAVER

"PLEASE, Louie," said Marmaduke Mouse as he stood meekly before the lion king. "Please, may I have my paycheck? I'm broke."

"No, you may not," bellowed the angry ruler. "I'm not going to pay you this month."

"But why?" asked Marmaduke. "Why won't you pay me?"

"Because," replied Louie looking sullen and settling back onto his throne. "Because I'm broke, too."

"But I need some spending money," protested Marmaduke. "Sometimes I like to buy an ice cream cone or some bubble gum or something. And I've worked for it."

"Pah," sneered King Louie. "The way you work, you wouldn't make a cent from anyone but me."

"Oh, yes, I would," answered the mouse. "I can and I will and I'll prove it, too."

Marmaduke walked sadly from the castle. He wasn't sure himself where he could find work and make money to tide him over until King Louie was in a position to pay what he owed. But Marmaduke had heard that there was always a reward for making an honest effort. And he was willing to make the effort if he could find someone who would be willing to give him a chance.

While Marmaduke was walking, he met Benny Beaver. The two boys were the best of friends and they had lots of good times together. Marmaduke almost forgot about wanting a job as he rushed to meet Benny.

"Hey," he shouted. "Benny, how about going fishing or swimming today?"

"Can't do it," explained Benny. "I'm on my way now to meet my dad and help him fell some trees. You know how we beavers are. We work all the time."

"Have a lot to do?" asked Marmaduke as an idea went through his mind.

"We certainly do," said Benny, shaking his head. "Dad says he doesn't know how we'll get everything done. By the time we cut the trees and build our beaver dam and remodel our house and put in our food supplies, it's going to take all summer."

"How would you like a helper?" grinned Marmaduke. "I'm a pretty good worker myself. In fact, I'm sort of an eager beaver because I'm anxious to work and make some money. Think your dad could use a hired hand?"

Dad Beaver was gnawing at a tree with his sharp teeth as the two boys came near. He was dragging it toward the water when they approached him and Marmaduke presented his plan. Dad Beaver thought a minute before he answered.

"Yes," he finally said, shaking his head. "I'll give you a try, Marmaduke. I need help and I like to see a boy like you be ambitious."

Marmaduke was sure that he could make good. So he and Benny set to work at cutting down trees. Benny started chewing with his sharp teeth that were like his dad's teeth and soon a small tree hit the ground. But bite and chew as hard as he could, Marmaduke could make little more than a dent in the trunk of his tree.

"That won't do," said Dad Beaver at last. "Beavers are born for this work because our teeth are big enough and hard enough to cut through the wood. But a mouse is different. So I'll give you another job. You can drag the trees down to the bank and then swim with them to the beaver dam and help plaster up the wall."

Dragging the trees was dangerous for anyone as little as a mouse. But he managed to do pretty well except once when a branch pinned him down and Dad Beaver had to come to his rescue. But swimming through the water, towing the big branches, was almost too much and Marmaduke wasn't as good a swimmer as the beavers. Once he went under.

"Glub. Glub. HELP!" shouted Marmaduke. And Dad Beaver heard and saw that Marmaduke was about to drown and he jumped in and rescued him.

Marmaduke was sorry he had been so unsuccessful so he suggested that he try plastering on the dam. He watched Benny Beaver, patting the mud into place with his large flat tail. But Marmaduke's tail was long and slim and didn't work the same at all. Finally, it got stuck in the mud that Benny was loading in between small twigs and, once again, Dad Beaver had to help him out.

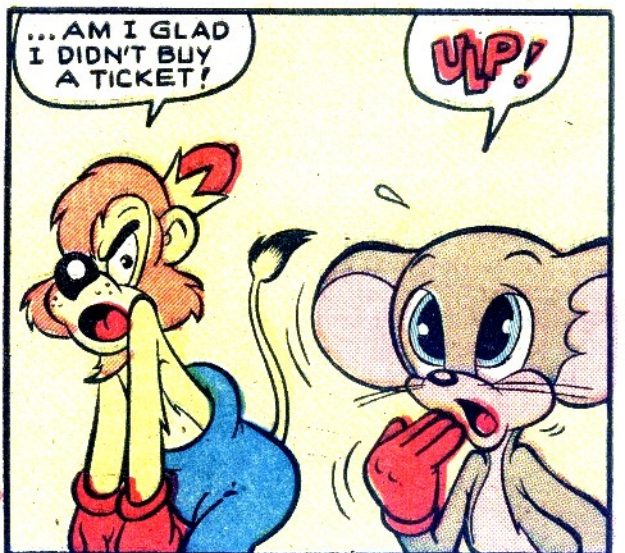

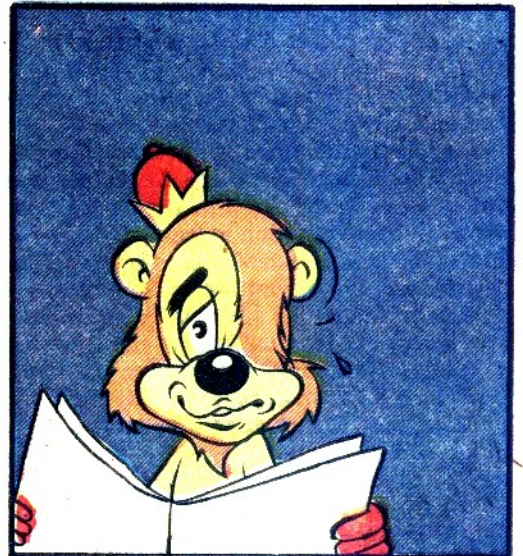

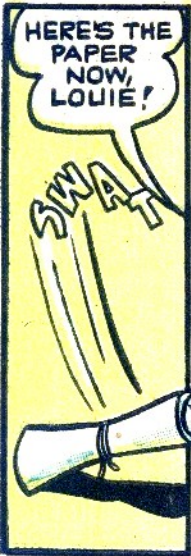

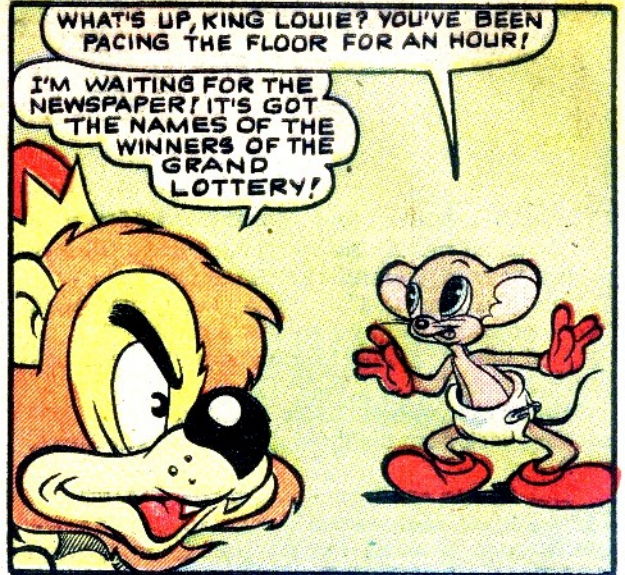

"I can't afford to have you here," Dad explained then. "You take so much of my time that I could have accomplished more without you here."

Two big tears started to trickle from Marmaduke's eyes. "I'm sorry, Dad Beaver," he apologized. "I did my best. I made an honest effort."

"And that," smiled Dad Beaver, "should be rewarded. It's not your fault that you can't be like a beaver. I'm going to give you five dollars for trying."

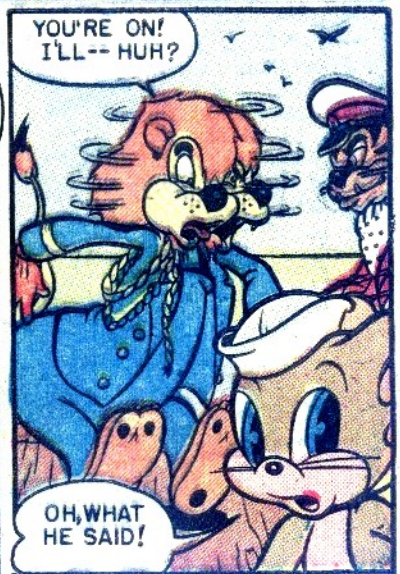

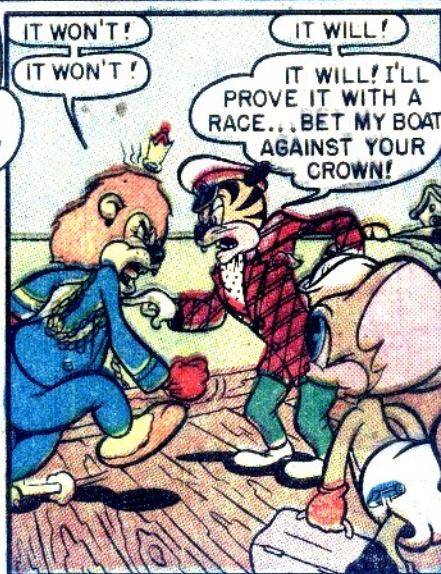

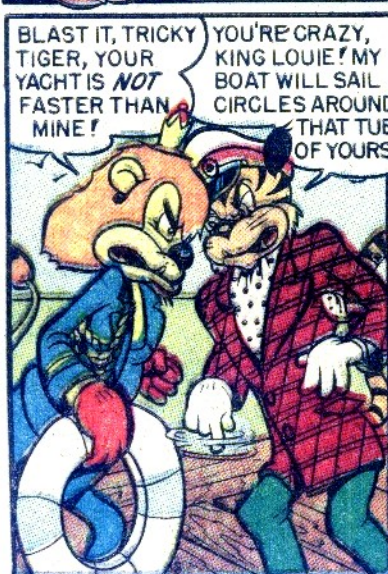

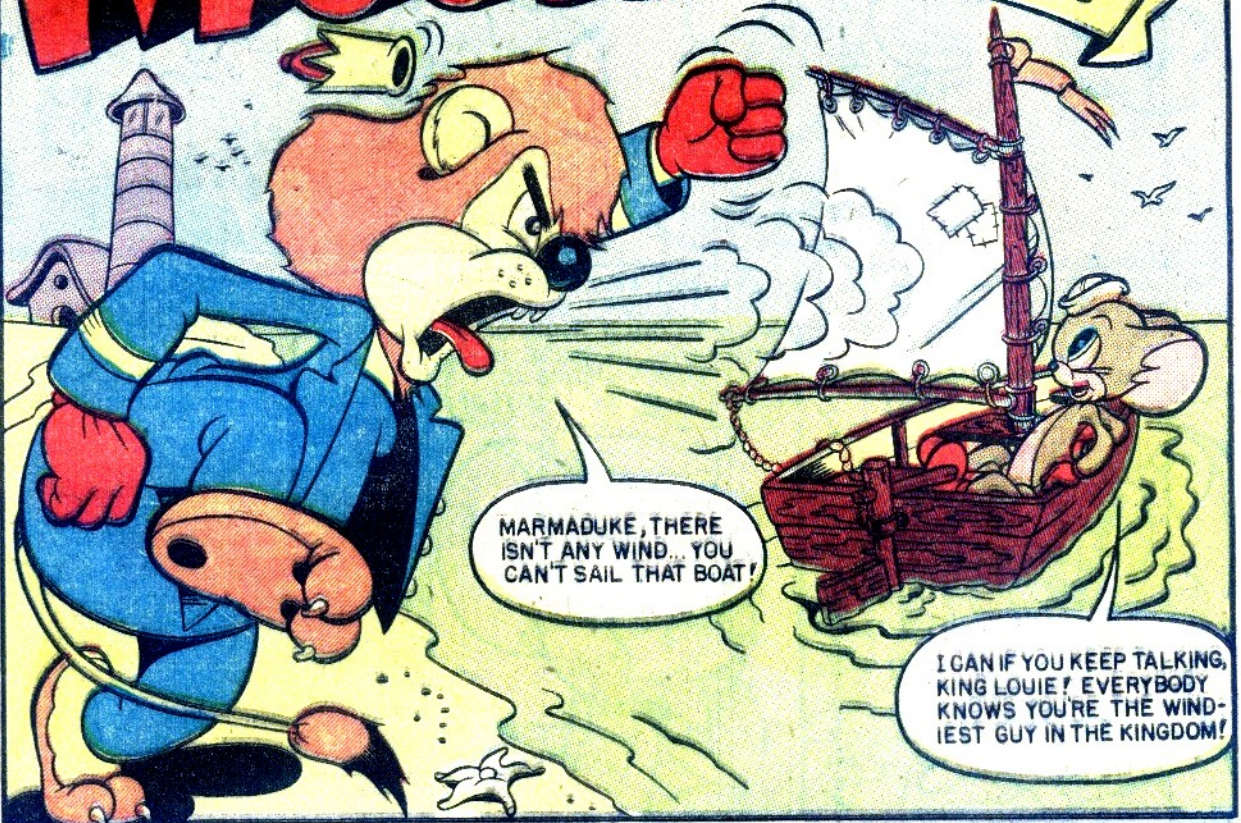

So Marmaduke rushed into the castle, happy and skipping. He showed his five dollars to King Louie. Louie seemed surprised and inquired as to how he had earned it.

"I believe," smiled Marmaduke, "that Dad Beaver gave it to me to be a lesson. I guess he wanted me to know that it always pays to do your best."
